GLOBAL STOCK MARKETS

Receiving FOMC minutes, the Global Stock Market adjusts after a strong rally

- US Stock Market down an average of 0.7%, EU600 -0.7%, Nikkei 225 -0.3%; CSI300 -2.1%.

- Commodity Index +1.4%; oil price -3.9%, gas -4.3%, precious metals -3% while agricultural product prices increased strongly.

- DXY +0.4% and US 10-year Treasury yield +0.05% for the week.

FOMC minutes show FED officials are cautious about the timing of monetary policy easing due to inflation slowing down in recent months. Most members are optimistic about the growth outlook, although they acknowledge that growth will slow down in 2024. The market is adjusting expectations for interest rate cuts, with a 60% probability of the FED cutting rates in September.

Next week, key information includes the second release of GDP estimates, US unemployment claims, the CPI, and the OPEC meeting.

VIETNAM STOCK MARKET

Strong selling pressure at the end of the week, VN-Index ends 4-week winning streak

VN-Index decreased 0.9%, ending its continuous 4-week increase. The market recorded 42% of stocks increasing in price, but 18 out of 19 sectors increased in price.

-SBV increased OMO and repo interest rates in response to pressure from the high exchange rate. Deposit interest rates increased at some banks.

- There was an active cash flow in the insurance, oil and gas, and utilities sectors. Stocks with information about state capital divestment, large-cap stocks on the Upcom exchange maintained good momentum.

- Foreign investors pushed strong net selling of 156 million USD, nearly double the previous week.

Strong selling pressure caused the market to retreat before unfavorable domestic and international news. The trend is still unclear, investors still need to be cautious, although they can also consider buying a portion during sessions with strong declines.

The Government's Socioeconomic Development Plan 2025 just passed focuses on management, perfecting institutions, and restructuring the economy with a focus on public investment, state-owned enterprises, and credit institutions. WEEKLY TOPIC: Global Monetary Policy Update as of May 2024

1. The Global Inflation Situation

After two years of implementing tight monetary policy (since early 2022), global inflation has cooled down significantly, especially in major economies such as the United States and Europe. As of April 2024, the CPI in the United States has decreased to 3.4% from a peak of over 9% in July 2022. However, the downward trend has shown signs of slowing down since July 2023 and has not yet been able to fall below 3%. In contrast, inflation in Europe has shown a more sustained downward trend since the beginning of 2024. China has emerged from deflation since February of this year, however, inflation remains very low.

On the other hand, the BCOM-Index - a global commodity price index compiled by Bloomberg - has shown signs of bottoming out since late February 2024 after a prolonged period of decline. The Containerized Freight Index - which measures the price of containerized freight shipping from the most important ports in China - has rebounded since mid-April 2024. Geopolitical tensions are a major factor putting pressure on commodity prices and shipping costs.

WEEKLY TOPIC: Global Monetary Policy Update as of May 2024

• In major economies:

- In the United States:

FED has halted interest rate hikes since its September 2023 meeting and maintained rates at a high level of 5.25% to 5.5% throughout the subsequent six meetings, up to the present. The primary reasons are (1) persistent inflation in the United States and (2) the current robustness of the US economy amidst two years of tight monetary policy.

(1) Inflation in the US remains persistent. The trend of inflation has been difficult to reduce since 07/2023 and has yet to fall below the 3% threshold.

(2) The US economy is considered to be sufficiently robust, as reflected in the labor market. The number of initial unemployment claims published weekly by the US Department of Labor remains around the low levels seen before the Covid-19 era (2020). However, the labor market also shows signs of cooling, as evidenced by the recent uptick in the unemployment rate; the non-farm payroll report for April indicates that the US labor market added 175,000 jobs in April, below the forecasted 185,000.

The Federal Reserve has not issued specific signals regarding the timing of interest rate reductions and consistently emphasizes the need for additional evidence of sustainable inflation decline. Moreover, the market has continuously shifted its forecasts for when the Fed will lower rates. According to the Fedwatch tool, the market has postponed the forecast for the start of the Fed's easing cycle from March/April to June/July, and now to September 2024. Currently, Fedwatch indicates a 51% probability that the Fed will reduce interest rates at the September meeting, down from 68% a week earlier. When the probability falls below 60%, the figure is considered unreliable. Overall, the Fed is showing a cautious approach in monetary policy management, as future factors remain uncertain.

WEEKLY TOPIC: Global Monetary Policy Update as of May 2024

- In Europe: ECB has stopped raising interest rates from the October 2023 meeting and continues to keep interest rates at the current peak level. However, the ECB has consistently signaled that it will begin to lower interest rates at the June 2024 meeting because (1) inflation has decreased close to the target threshold of 2%, and (2) the economy remains weak. The GDP of Europe has only just returned to slightly positive growth in Q1 2024 after two consecutive quarters of negative growth (Q1 2024: +0.3% QoQ; Q4 2023: -0.1% QoQ; Q3 2023: -0.1% QoQ).

- Tại Trung Quốc: In China: PBoC still maintains loose monetary policy. It has repeatedly cut benchmark interest rates and is currently keeping the rates at a low level. Concurrently, the government has also introduced numerous easing policies and supportive commitments to stimulate the domestic economy, such as providing preferential loan packages, reducing the required reserve ratio, etc. Most recently, the PBoC plans to initiate a 500 billion yuan (approximately 70 billion USD) refinancing program to support small and medium-sized enterprises in the technology and science sectors. However, the response of the Chinese economy to these policies remains tepid. Additionally, the real estate market in China has not shown positive signs, with housing sales still experiencing negative growth. The market is still anticipating further easing policies.

• In Asean 5 region :

For the ASEAN 5 region, except for Vietnam, other countries are still maintaining tight monetary policies, in which Indonesia continued to increase interest rates recently in April, and other countries maintained interest rates at peak zone, the easing cycle has not yet begun, but operating interest rates have shown signs of reaching a peak.

According to forecasts by financial institutions, most countries in the region are expected to loosen monetary policies in 2024.

3. In Vietnam

Currently, Vietnam still maintains a loose monetary policy. The SBV continuously encourages the banking system to reduce lending interest rates, despite inflation showing signs of rising again in recent months (April CPI: +4.4% YoY), showing that the SBV still prioritizes promoting economic growth this year.

However, the disadvantage for Vietnam when the Fed maintains tightened monetary policy longer than expected while the State Bank maintains loose monetary policy has been reflected most clearly in the USD/VND exchange rate. DXY-Index has risen, pulling the USD/VND rate with it. As of the end of April 2023, the VND has depreciated by more than 4% compared to the end of 2023 when the DXY-Index was +4.82% YTD. To manage the exchange rate, the SBV has restarted the money absorption channel on OMOs since March 11, 2024, and began selling foreign currency from April 2024 (for details on how the SBV uses tools to regulate the market, please refer to the April Report). As a result, the rise of the USD/VND has slowed down, but it still hovers around the peak. BSC believes that only when the Fed begins an easing cycle will the exchange rate be able to cool down significantly.

Additionally, unpredictable risks from geopolitical conflicts could lead to cost-push inflation risks, putting more pressure on central banks to start and maintain a cycle of lowering interest rates, which in turn will also put more pressure on maintaining Vietnam's loose monetary policy.

TECHNICAL ANALYSIS: VN-Index struggled near the short-term peak area; the trend was unclear

Daily chart: After the rising session at the beginning of the week, close to the peak of the year, VN-Index was struggling under strong profit-taking pressure. Wide-body candles with long candle shadows presented a disadvantage when the index accumulated to create momentum to surpass the short-term peak. Demand at low price areas was still good, helping the index recover after reaching the support level of 1,250 points. The indicators returned to the neutral zone and a slight divergence signal appeared between the price and the RSI indicator.

Some notable features of the daily chart:

- RSI decreased from 63 to 54 points.
- MACD kept above the signal line and crossed up the 0 level. Liquidity increased by 36% compared to average trading last week.
- VN-Index is above the SMA 20, 50, 100 and SMA 200 lines.

Conclusion: VN-Index has basically completed the V-shaped model and moved to the peak accumulation area. Profit-taking activities accelerated at the old peak as predicted last week, but buying activities were also activated at the support threshold of 1,250 points. Liquidity increasing in down sessions and decreasing in up sessions was not a positive signal, signaling that the current accumulation zone lacks sustainability. In case the VN-Index continues to adjust next week, 1,250 points will be the price range confirming the end of the recovery process or the market can continue to accumulate from 1,250 - 1,285 points to create upward momentum in the medium term.
